HALF FANATICS

APRIL 2015 NEWSLETTER

Featured Fanatic

Kristin Johnson, Half Fanatic #8209

August 22, 2007 started out like any normal day, but by mid-afternoon my life had changed in ways I could never have imagined. At the age of 22, only a few months after graduating college and newly married, I was given the news that my husband, CPL Joshua Harmon, had been killed in a helicopter crash in the desert of Iraq. In a matter of minutes, my future had gone from full of hope and adventure to empty. I was faced with the challenge of forging a new and different path and I had no idea where to begin.

I spent about a year and a half wandering and lost until I attended a seminar for military survivors hosted by the Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors (TAPS) in Washington, DC. This seminar helped give me the tools I needed to really start my healing, one of which was the Run and Remember Team (now known as Team TAPS).

Team TAPS is comprised of mostly military survivors - spouses, parents, siblings, children, friends - who choose to run in honor of their loved ones and to raise money for the TAPS organization. They are present and logging miles at various events across the country, including Big Wild Life Runs in Alaska and Run Disney races in California and Florida. If you don't have your own fallen hero to honor, but would like to run with the Team and raise money for the organization, you can choose to be matched with a surviving military family.

While I was athletic and played sports growing up, I never viewed running as more than a punishment. Still, I was drawn to their table and as I was standing there learning more, all I could think about was a conversation I'd had with my husband not long before his death about running and training together when he returned home. I knew that participating in an event with the Run and Remember Team was something I had to do to honor my husband. So, with a deep breath I sat down at my computer and registered to run the Marine Corps Marathon 10K that October. I freaked out for a moment (was I really doing this?!) before I got up and took to my first training run.

That first training run wasn't pretty, but as time went on I found that it got easier. I also found that this time was my therapy. It was just me and the pavement - my chance to talk to my husband, reflect on our life together, and think about my future. It helped me to heal in a way I never realized I needed and with every step I felt stronger, in more ways than one. As my first big race approached, my nerves were all over the place. I was convinced I was going to forget my gear or crap out part way through and not finish, but worst of all I was afraid I was going to fail in my endeavor to make my husband proud.

As I stood at the start line on race day, I found that my nerves were nowhere in sight. I was calm and ready and I knew that my husband was there with me, holding me up and pushing me forward with each step. Crossing the finish line that day was the best I had felt since I received the news that we'd lost Joshua. It was emotional (of course I cried), but I felt an overwhelming sense of pride and accomplishment and finally understood what that "runner's high" was about. That high drove me to the finish line of my first half marathon in April 2010 and still pushes me today (I've completed 25 half marathons and counting, as well as countless smaller distances).

Much to my disbelief, I've also fallen in love with running. I've learned that I am stronger than I ever realized and that, despite this overwhelming tragedy, I couldn't let my grief control me. The best way to honor my husband was to live my life well and continue to accomplish my goals to make him proud.

I've decided that now is the time to tackle my biggest goal yet. I have once again signed up with Team TAPS to run in honor of my hero and raise money for an organization that helped save me in such an unexpected way. This time, instead of the 10K, I will be running all 26.2 miles in the Marine Corps Marathon. What's even more special to me is that this race will take place six years to the day from my first race with TAPS. I will once again have my husband's picture on my back and I am already emotional thinking about crossing that finish line. Let the training begin!

FANATIC POLL

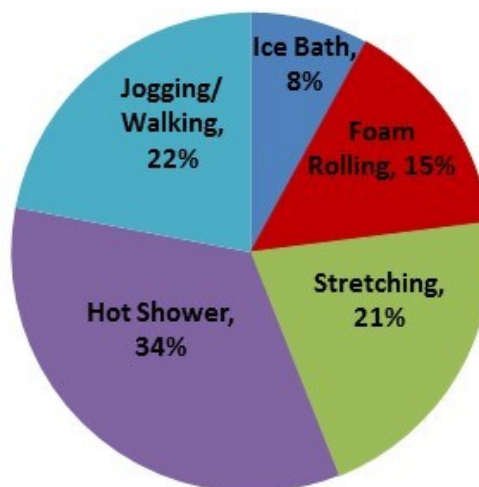

Each month there will be a "Fanatic poll". This poll will be posted online. Please take a few moments to answer this poll. I will post the results in the next newsletter.

This month's question:

How closely do you watch what you eat?

Please vote online between now and May 31st at: <http://survey.constantcontact.com/poll/a07eazw6ohyi9kt3w0t/start.html>.

Last month's question:
What do you find most helpful for post-race recovery?
