HALF FANATICS

JANUARY 2015 NEWSLETTER

Featured Fanatic

Dawn Davis, Half Fanatic #5019

I always joke and have no fear in saying that I actually hate running. However, I love the journey. I love the people you meet and the stories you hear. Every runner has some form of a story. In 2011, I started getting sick, gaining weight, and feeling horrible. After two bouts in the ER over the course of as many weeks, I was told that there was a possibility that I had liver failure. This began an eight-month journey through doctors, specialists, and procedures that I would never wish on my worst enemy. This all yielded no answers as to why my liver was failing. Then, one day, at Brooke Army Medical Center in Fort Sam Houston, TX, one blood draw, and a liver specialist that had practicing liver specialty for over 20 years burst into what I felt to be uncontrollable laughter. My liver had healed itself and was operating within perfect parameters. The specialist was so confused by this result, he kept me there for an additional week because he ran more tests to ensure that I was actually good. He told me that the level of my enzymes and what was going on with it at the beginning of that process eight months prior, that I had a mortality rate of no more than 30 days. He told me that there was, and still is, no medical reason why I was still alive. I was sent back home to my permanent duty station, but with one side note: he said that chances of me running again were going to be slim to none, and he wanted to place me on a no-running profile. Yes. Me. The one that loudly professes and has no shame admitting her disdain to running begged to be given a chance to just try, and let me be taken out of running on my own terms. It was hard. It was painful. Every. Step. Hurt. There were days that I thought that I just needed to throw in the towel. But after four months of not giving up, I passed the Army Physical Fitness test, which included...running. Then I passed another. I was moved to a different duty location, where I passed another. Then, having been through that life-altering event, I decided that I was no longer going to say that I 'wanted' to do something. I was just going to do it. I signed up for the 2013 Atlanta Marathon for my first marathon. Having no clue as to what I got myself into, I just started running, getting faster, feeling more fit, and kept on running. I completed multiple 5k and 10k races before I graduated to half marathons. I qualified for Half Fanatics in the Women's Running Nashville event in 2013. My first race as a Half Fanatic was the Atlanta Marathon, where I had no shame in wearing my HF gear. Though I completed it, I felt like I had let myself down, as I came in second to last. I found a second marathon, revamped my training, and ran, ran some more, then kept on running. I completed my second and final marathon at Kiawah Island in December 2014. I came in last that time, but only because I stopped to help a runner that had it a serious wall at mile 23. Though I'm done with marathons, with 14 lifetime races under my belt to date and 19 planned half marathons for 2015, I will admit that I'm a runner. If you run into me, you may hear an occasional cuss word geared towards running, only because I still can't get past the fact that I hate running; but I love running. I love hearing the stories, seeing new and unique places, and meeting new friends. No matter what life throws at you, don't give up, don't give in, push yourself, and know that if you are here, it is because God has a reason for it. Realize truly how much of a gift each day is that you are given. Whether you run a sub two-hour race or take four hours or more per race, you're out there, and you're motivating someone. I'm out there and I run because I can. Not always because I want to, but because I can. Whenever I'm out there, I always try to meet and have a great and meaningful conversation with at least one person, learn their name and their story. Most of the times, I hear more than just one story, and I love them all.

FANATIC POLL

Each month there will be a “Fanatic poll”. This poll will be posted online. Please take a few moments to answer this poll. I will post the results in the next newsletter.

This month’s question:

Do you train with a heart rate monitor?

Please vote online between now and February 28th at: <http://survey.constantcontact.com/poll/a07eakhn1sni675tkla/start.html>.

Last month’s question:

What is your strategy when racing with friends?
