HALF FANATICS MAY 2014 NEWSLETTER

Featured Fanatics

Scott Devine, Half Fanatics #5256

STARTING LINE: Everyone has their own personal story about why they decided to lace up their running shoes for the first time. Mine is a story of salvation... my own (don't worry, it's got a happy ending). In the summer of 2008, I hit a true low point in my life. Both of my parents suffered life-threatening health scares within a span of three weeks (they're both okay now). I was 40 pounds overweight, stuck in a one-way relationship (the wrong way, by the way) and had just been laid off from a demanding job. I decided I needed to drastically shake up my life and do something I thought impossible. I took a chance and signed up with the Team To End AIDS charity group in order to train for the Los Angeles Marathon. And during that training I discovered a passion in me I didn't know existed. I found new energy, renewed confidence and a positive outlook that had been missing from my life... and my clothes fit much better too. In May of 2009, I ran my first full marathon and I've just kept on running.

EAR TO EAR: My very first running coach often said my running gait reminded him of a spastic Clydesdale just clomping along the road. But the one thing he did love about my running style was that I always seemed to be smiling. And I've had many friends say the same thing. I may not run pretty; I may not run sleek; but I do look like I'm having an absolute blast. And that suits me just fine.

MY BEST RACE: Picking my most memorable race is like trying to pick my favorite movie (so many to choose from). But a recent race does stand out in my mind: the 2014 Hollywood Half Marathon. Why? Because this was a race where everything seemed to click. I remember running down Hollywood Blvd. (aka "The Walk of Fame") at dawn with a group of my friends. I ran hard. I ran happy. And I pushed myself. I ended up with my half marathon PR and a time over 16 minutes faster than the year before. It showed me how much I've progressed since I started running and makes me excited about what lies ahead.

RUNNING FRATERNITY: I've had several people ask me what I like most about the Half Fanatics. I equate the group to being "a running fraternity." We're a likeminded and supportive group who are, well "fanatical," about all things running. And I love the fact that no matter where I go for a race, whether it's in southern California, Atlanta, Chicago or Wisconsin, I'm bound to run into a bunch of fellow fanatics who are excited to say "hello" and snap a picture or two.

GET IT IN WRITING: I really enjoy visiting the Half Fanatics website and Facebook pages, whether it's getting information about upcoming races, picking someone's brain about a running issue, giving my two cents on a hot topic or just tossing out a "like" to the newest member of the "asylum" (we're growing fast, aren't we). And I've even taken my love of running to the blogosphere as this year I started up my own blog: www.trippingthekenyan.com where I get to wax philosophic about the lighter side of running.

GOAL ORIENTED: 2014 is definitely shaping up to be my biggest (and best) year running yet. In the past, I've never run more than 7 half/full marathons in a single calendar year. For 2014 I've currently got 18 races (3 full marathons, 13 half marathons and a pair of 10Ks) on my schedule. I've already run my fastest marathon and half marathons ever and on June 1st I qualified as a Marathon Maniac (#9416,) earning my "double agent" status. I'm also looking forward to continuing to push myself and hoping to break the 2-hour barrier in the half marathon by year's end. And on Nov. 16th, I'll really be channeling my inner fanatic as I will be running the Avengers Half Marathon and Las Vegas Rock 'n' Roll Half Marathon both in the same day. Don't worry, there will be a few other fanatics right there with me. We are one "helluva" supportive group, after all.

Run hard. Run happy. But no matter what... Run on!
