My Road to the Asylum I used to run cross country in Jr. High School, but when it came time to go to high school I decided it was just too far to run. Fast forward 20 or so years to 2011 and a group of friends and I decided it was time to get back in shape. We started with some yoga and such and then graduated to some jogging. I couldn't even jog around the block. We decided to really challenge ourselves and plan to run a 5K 4 months later in June. We started with a couch to 5K playlist (the one from the UK Ministry of Health) and since then I haven't stopped. That first year I ran 3 5K's and a 10K. I did that level for another year and then it went downhill from there.

I found out my friend Ray (RayoVac Double Agent #1601) was running and we started planning races together. He goaded me into my first half marathon (The Air Force Half Marathon 3 years ago), and then bumped up to the Full. And we've been running like this ever since. We get together and find race weekends with full and half and run them together.

My Most Memorable Races My favorite race has to be the Air Force Marathon. It is such a top quality race. As an Air Force brat there's something about seeing all of the service men and women cheering you on and then finishing under the wings of the planes. It's a truly incredible experience. I have run it for the last 5 years, and have doubled up with the 5K on Friday night and long run on Saturday. It's also one of my favorites because I usually get to run with some of my family. My Mom has run every year she's been able to and continues to inspire me with her tenacity and unwavering drive to finish.

My most memorable race was the Urban Bourbon Half Marathon last fall. I had planned to do this one solo, but even last minute Ray decided to join me. He talked about pushing for a PR or taking it easy. In the end he decided he was going to get me to PR. I had been having a good year and dropped 10 min off of my PR already. I thought maybe we'd get a minute or so, but nothing crazy. The race started out ok, but about 3 miles in the tape on my toes started coming off (or so I thought, turned out to be rubbing my other toes and was completely shredded). Another mile in it really started to hurt, but we were on pace and doing ok so we pushed through. Despite the hills we kept on a PR pace. Around 11 I hit a wall, my foot was throbbing, legs were lead, and was slowing down, but Ray pushed me on and we ended up finishing together a full 4 minutes ahead of my PR!

My Inspiration I run all of my races for Destiny Rescue (www.destinyrescue.org). DR is an incredible organization fighting to rescue children from sex trafficking. I have been volunteering for them in various capacities for 5 years. I've taken 2 trips to Southeast Asia (their primary operating area) with them and have fallen in love with them. They not only rescue the children but also provide aftercare, education, and vocational training. Their mission is so important and these children are so precious and wonderful. I'd love to chat with anyone who's interested about them, and I'd love to have you join me on a "Race to Rescue". Just drop me a line at allyn@crayo-running.com or find me on the Facebook Fanatics group!

My Goals for 2016 & Beyond My goal for 2016 is to just keep going. This year Ray and I will run 19 races. I'll be doing 16 halves and 3 fulls. My first 2 fulls will be back to back, as part of the Mainly Marathons Midwest series (that way I can get my Double Agent status of course!). I also get to pass along the love of running when my Son (8 years old) runs the Air Force 5K with me (his first 5k)!

I'm also looking ahead to the future years. Next year we plan to cut back on the number of races (it's tough planning that many races plus travel especially with each of us having family commitments!) and focus on doing better. I'm also thinking about some bucket list races like the Marine Corps Marathon, Disney races, and even some "crazy" ones like the Ankor Wat half, Bangkok Marathon, Great Wall Marathon, etc! One thing I know is that I'll just keep plodding along and finishing. I'm always pushing for a PR, but in the end it's about the internal challenge of a finish. I'm certainly not the fastest out there, but I'm out there and having fun (at least once I'm done). This is why I love the Half Fanatics.
